This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE

A SUGGESTION having been made that it would be interesting to the Club to print the lists of members from the date of its foundation—1764—the Managers, at their meeting on November 16, 1905, passed a unanimous resolution in favour of so doing, and committed to us the work of Editorship.

We at once entered upon our task, and trust that we are now submitting to the members an accurate account, so far as it is possible, of the 3465 gentlemen who, in the first 136 years of its existence, have had the honour to belong to it.

We have taken as our basis the "Dictionary of National Biography," supplementing it largely with information derived from Peerages, Burke's "Landed Gentry," Parliamentary Returns, and other works of reference.

We met with very great difficulty in dealing with the earlier years owing to the somewhat casual manner of inscribing the names of candidates for election, as they are generally entered under their surname only, without Christian name or address by which they could be distinguished, and this difficulty has in many cases proved insuperable. To such names, therefore, we have attached a note of interrogation.

The names have been copied exactly from the entries in the candidate books, without correcting many undoubted mistakes in spelling or description.

PREFACE

We beg to impress upon members that the Lists now printed do not profess to be biographies of the many distinguished persons who have belonged and do belong to Brooks's. To have given these, at all fully, would have increased the bulk of the volume and the expenses of production to an inconvenient degree. For further details we must refer readers to the "Dictionary of National Biography" and the other works of reference above mentioned.

We beg to offer our most sincere thanks to Sir Geo. O. Trevelyan for his kind permission to make quotations from his "Early History of Charles James Fox" and "American Revolution," of which we very freely availed ourselves, as his pages on the condition of London Society in the first years of King George III. generally, and of Brooks's in particular, exhaust the subject; to Lord Fitzmaurice for allowing us to reprint in extenso his graphic account of Lord Granville's speech in Brooks's in 1887, and also to the Rev. S. Baring-Gould for his sanction to reprint an abridged account of the disappearance of Mr. Bathurst, taken from his volumes "Historic Oddities and Strange Events."

Lastly, we must place on record our warmest thanks to Major J. F. Wegg-Prosser, our Secretary, and his Assistant, Mr. W. Lovelace, without whose zealous and unwearying assistance—at all times cheerfully rendered—in searching into the records of the Club we should have found our labours most seriously increased.

INTRODUCTION

1. The origin of Brooks's is thus described by Sir Geo. O. Trevelyan ("Early History of Charles James Fox"): "This society, the most famous political club that will ever have existed in England, was not political in its origin. In the first list of its members the Duke of Grafton and Lord Weymouth are shown side by side with the Duke of Richmond and the Duke of Portland. Brooks's took its rise from the inclination of men, who moved in the same social orbit, to live together more freely and familiarly than was compatible with the publicity of a coffee-house; and how free and familiar was the life of Marquises and Cabinet Ministers, when no one was there to watch them, the club rules most agreeably testify." Origin of Brooks's

The rules of admission were evidently inspired by the caution of social, and not political prudence. The ballot took place between eleven at night and one in the morning—which custom continued until 1844, when the hours were altered to between three and five in the afternoon—a single black ball excluded; and a member who joined any other club, except White's, was at once struck off the books.

The establishment was formed and farmed by one Almack,* a wine merchant who was strictly enjoined to "sell no wines that the club approves of out of the house" (Rule XXVI.), and for some years the club was called after his name. The first mention of "Almack's" is in a letter from the Earl of March to Geo. Selwyn, July 1765, which shows that the gambling for which the Club became so notorious was already prevalent.

The first mention of Brooks, or Brookes, appears in a letter of A. M. Storer to G. Selwyn in August 1774, but the name of

* It is stated (Hon. Algernon Bourke's "History of White's") that the founder was a Scotsman—Macall; "Almack" being merely an anagram of that name.

Digitized by Google

Almack seems to have lingered on down to 1778, several letters in the Selwyn correspondence being so dated, until the end of that year when the Club moved into its present house, built by Brooks.

"Dinner was served at half-past four and the bill was brought in at seven. Supper began at eleven and ended at half an hour after midnight. The cost of the dinner was eight shillings a head and of the supper six; and any one who had been present during any part of the meal hours paid his share of the wine in accordance with that old law of British conviviality which so long held good in the commercial room, and has not yet died out from the Bar Mess."

No gaming was allowed in the "Eating Room" except "tossing up for reckonings," under the penalty of paying the whole bill of the members present.

The gambling in its early days

2. One of the chief features of Brooks's, certainly for the first forty years of its existence, was the unlimited gambling which there prevailed, as the early rules clearly prove. At cards or at hazard no one might stake on credit, nor borrow from any of the players or bystanders. "Every party shall pay for their own cards." "The dice-money shall be paid by the person or persons agreeing to call for them." "Every person playing at the new Quinze Table shall keep fifty guineas before him." "Every person playing at the Twenty-guinea Table shall keep not less than twenty guineas before him."

"But with these regulations began and ended all the restraint which the Club imposed, or affected to impose, upon the gambling propensities of its members. The rule about ready money soon became a dead letter; and if ever a difficulty arose, Mr. Brooks, to his cost, was always at hand with the few hundred guineas which were required to spare any of his patrons the annoyance of leaving a well-placed chair at the faro bank, or a well-matched rubber of whist." Under such circumstances it is, perhaps, not surprising that, after some eight years, Brooks

> "Who nursed in clubs, disdains a vulgar trade, > Exults to trust, and blushes to be paid," retired from the Mastership of the Club and died in poverty, 1782.*

* There is a tradition that, in order to escape the rapacity of his creditors, the body of Brooks was interred in a small vault, still existing, under the pavement of

Brooks's in the olden Time

(From a drawing by Rowlandson in the possession of the Club)

The passion for gambling at this period pervaded Society, and was rather a profession than a pastime to the leaders of the London world, and the sums lost and won at Brooks's seem almost incredible. "The gaming," wrote Horace Walpole in 1770, "is worthy the decline of our Empire. The young men lose five, ten, fifteen thousand pounds in an evening. Lord Stavordale, not one-and-twenty, lost eleven thousand last Tuesday, but recovered it by one great hand at hazard. He swore a great oath 'now if I had been playing deep, I might have won millions.'"*

Mr. Thynne having, according to a note written opposite his name in the Club books, "won only £12,000 during the last two months retired in disgust, March 21, 1772; and that he may never return is the ardent wish of members." The Selwyn correspondence teems with references to the gambling at Brooks's, and to the straits to which the losers were reduced; even so wealthy a magnate as the Earl of March lamenting that he "is quite broke," and the disastrous results to Charles Fox are too well known to need repeating here.

The Betting-Book†

3. There exists at Brooks's Club a curious memorial of the society in which Fox lived, and of the constant and minute attention which that Society bestowed upon all his proceedings. As far back as the reign of William III., foreigners had observed that, on matters great and small, the only sure test of English opinion was the state of the odds, bun and coffee-houses were the common places of meeting and where bets were made. But by the time George III. was on the throne, persons of rank and position were tired of being challenged to stake their money by frequenters of public coffee-houses, whose capacity to pay was doubtful and about whose anticipations as to current public events, or the destination of the next blue riband, they did not care a farthing. The first London clubs, of the model to which that name is now exclusively applied, was instituted, among other kindred purposes, with the object of providing the world of fashion with a central office for making wagers, and a registry for recording them.

St. James's Street. For this, however, there is no sort of evidence in the records of the club, and the legend may have been suggested by the smallness of the vault, which would just contain a coffin.

* This incident occurred at the "Cocoa Tree," not at Brooks's.

And so it comes about that the betting-book at Brooks's has an interest of its own, which resembles nothing in any library or museum in the country. The entries in its pages, most characteristic of the time and the men; standing, each in their proper order, between the covers within which they were originally written; uniform in their general character, but with variety of detail as inexhaustible as the circumstances of our national history, and the changes in our national manners; form a volume which is, to an ordinary collection of autographs, what the Liber Veritatis of Claude is to a portfolio of detached sketches by the great masters.

The subjects of the bets in this remarkable volume are of the most multifarious, ranging from one of 500 guineas to ten that none of the Cabinet were beheaded by that day three years, to one of fifty that Mdlle. Heinel does not dance at the Opera House next winter. Indeed, there was no event or experience, in the whole compass of human existence, which the members of Brooks's thought it necessary to exclude from the field of legitimate speculation: "Quicquid agunt homines, votum, timor, ira, voluptas gaudia, discursus, nostri est farrago libelli."

Successive additions to the number of Members

4. The Club originally consisted of 150 members at an annual subscription of four guineas, with the proviso that "in case that proportion falls short of 400 guineas on the whole, such deficiency shall be made good to Mr. Almack." But this small number soon expanded, and by 1776 had been doubled, by successive additions of 20, 30, 50 and 50. Fifteen years passed, and in 1791 another 150 were added, and in 1816, 100 more, bringing the numbers up to 550. Twenty-five more were added in 1823, and a like number in 1857, bringing the total up to 600, at which it remained till 1901, when it was raised to 650, as it at present stands.

The "Masters" of the Club

5. It has been mentioned above (paragraph 1) that the first Manager, or rather "Master" of the Club was Almack, followed by Brooks (circ. 1774), at whose death (1782) one Griffin succeeded, whose name can be traced down to 1815, though for the six years preceding this date the management figures as "Griffin & Co."; but from 1815 he disappears, and at some subsequent time the Mastership devolved upon Wheelwright, who, in 1824, took Halse into partnership, and retired in 1831; whereupon Halse took Henry Banderet into partnership, himself retiring in 1846 and receiving a grant from the Club of £500 on account of his interest in the unexpired lease of the house, and 50 guineas for the surrender of his lodging therein. From that time until his death in 1880, Banderet continued Master, as must be within the recollection of many still-existing members, and none who did know him will forget the stately courtesy which he showed to every member of the Club, high or low, distinguished or insignificant, old or young; and to him, probably, is to be attributed the credit of having established in Brooks's that refined, if somewhat solemn, comfort, which resembles rather the luxury of a first-class private house than a club, in which it is not surpassed by any in London, and which has led to its being humorously described as "like dining in a Duke's house with the Duke lying dead upstairs." His attention to his duties as "Master" was unremitting, and it was said that, during the thirty-four years in which he filled that post, he had never been known to be absent, except on one occasion when he was persuaded to take a holiday; but he found himself so miserable that by noon he was back at Brooks's, which he never afterwards left until his death, when the entire management was taken over by the Club, as is the system at present.

Institution of Managers

6. During the first thirty-two years of the Club's existence there does not appear to have been any Committee, or Governing Body, apart from the Master; any alterations in rules being, probably, submitted to a ballot of all the members. But in 1795 a Rule was passed enacting that there shall be six Managers, appointed on February 1, who are to continue one year; each Manager to appoint his successor. If any Manager neglects naming such successor before March 1, a general meeting (which shall be called for the occasion) shall fill up the vacancy. The first Managers were appointed on February 14, 1796, being balloted for by all the members of the Club. The gentlemen so appointed were the Earl of Bessborough, the Earl of Upper Ossory, Lord Romney, Lord Robert Spencer, Sir Thos. Miller, and Mr. Crawle.

This Rule endured until 1857, when the mode of election was altered from co-optation into that of a ballot of all the members, which substantially is that prescribed in Rules XVII. and XVIII. at the present day. The Managers, for many years after their institution, seem to have restricted their attention to social matters only, and not to have interfered in the general administration of the Club.

Digitized by Google

They met but rarely—once or perhaps twice in the year—and no regular minutes of their proceedings exist anterior to the year 1841. There was no Rule for the holding of a General Annual Meeting. Meetings of the whole Club were convened from time to time, as occasion demanded, until 1892, when, mainly through the exertions of the late Mr. Charles Robarts, Rule XX. was passed, after a considerable amount of opposition and discussion, enacting that a general meeting should take place annually during the month of May.

The Subscription and various changes in it

7. The subscription, fixed at four guineas in 1764, was before 1779 raised to eight, and on May 25 in that year the Committee, or whatever was the governing body, granted Brooks an extra two guineas, for two years only "in consideration of the great expense he hath been at in erecting and fitting up his house," viz., the present house (see paragraph 11). Brooks compounded, with those that were willing, for sixteen guineas paid down in advance.

On April 17, 1791, the subscription was again raised to ten guineas, and in addition an entrance-fee of five guineas was imposed, and it was further resolved that every member should pay one guinea in addition to the subscription for that year "in order that the new Regulations* about Dinner, Forfeits, &c., may take place immediately."

So matters continued until 1815, when the subscription was increased to eleven guineas "in consideration of the great expense the Masters of the Club had been put to by various alterations of the Club-house."

On March 18, 1817, an additional guinea was imposed—to be paid on January 1, 1818—for the express purpose of increasing the Coffee-room.

In 1828 it was resolved that the extra guinea added to the Annual Subscription in 1815 should be reserved to form a fund, to be invested in the names of the Trustees, to be employed as the Club should thereafter direct. This continued till 1845, when

* "17th April, 1791.—That Dinner at 10/6 per head shall be ready at ½ before 6 every day from 1st November to the P. of Wales' birthday (August 12th). If the number at dinner shall not exceed 4, they shall have no reckoning to pay but for Wine, Fruits, &c. If the number exceeds 4 the two guineas shall be deducted from the whole reckoning."

the subscription was reduced to eleven guineas, at which it still remains.*

The gross amount of the fund so formed amounted in 1845, together with the interest thereon, to £13,688 18s.; but there had been paid away at various times and for various purposes sums amounting together to £2576 6s. 5d.

8. A curious course was pursued in 1846 when "owing to there being at present fifty vacancies and very few candidates" it was proposed, on February 7, "to admit by the usual ballot fifty members on the payment of ten guineas each including entrance and the first year's subscription," in other words, to admit them at half price. Whether this proposal was ever passed is not apparent, as the minutes of that meeting were not signed, but as far as the records show only twenty-seven were so admitted.

Successive additions to Entrance Fees:

1791 . . .	5 guineas, in addition to annual subscription of 10 guineas
1815 . . .	Raised to 9 guineas
1881 . . .	„ 15 „
1892 . . .	„ 25 „
1901 . . .	„ 30 „

9. There is a very common impression that the eleventh guinea of the subscription, still paid, was first imposed to pay the debts of C. J. Fox, but of this there is no evidence whatever. That Fox's debts were paid by his friends is certain (see below, paragraph 15, on pp. xx. and xxi.), and that he had many friends in Brooks's is equally so, and they doubtless were the chief contributors, but as individuals only; the idea that Brooks's ever contributed in its corporate capacity is absolutely without foundation.

Erroneous idea as to the origin of the eleventh guinea

10. The original Rules are very strict on the subject of arrears, Rule XX. providing that all subscriptions shall be paid between March 1 and June 25, otherwise the defaulter is to be ipso facto excluded and his name erased. This excellent provision, however, seems to have been more honoured in the breach than in the

Strict Rules against arrears

* This would seem to imply that at some time between 1828 and 1845 the subscription had been raised above eleven guineas; but of this there is no record whatever.

Digitized by Google

observance, for on June 8, 1800, Griffin, who was the Master, was "authorized to inform members that, being in arrears, they are no longer members of the Club, and the Managers have directed him to recover the arrears due to him." Yet, notwithstanding the resolution of the Managers, on May 3, 1806, Griffin reported the arrears to amount to £6000, which large sum had in 1809 increased to £10,000.

This generous confidence of the Masters in the ultimate solvency of members endured until the death of Banderet, in spite of a periodical protest against the large amount of house accounts outstanding for dinners and other disbursements, and on one occasion it is said that he represented to the Managers that a certain member was £800 in his debt, and although he was quite ready to trust Mr. A. B. to any amount, he did think that, under the circumstances, he need not insist upon having ortolans for his dinner every night.

The Club-house

11. The original seat of the Club was in Pall Mall on, or near the site of the present Marlborough Club, and the precise date of its removal into St. James's Street cannot be positively fixed; but certain it is that the existing house was built by Brooks, from designs by Holland the architect, in 1778, and in a letter from T. Townshend—afterwards first Viscount Sydney—to G. Selwyn, dated in October of that year, he mentions "as a proof of our increasing opulence I need only shew the New Opera House, which is now fitting up at a monstrous expense . . . and Brooks's new house, fitted up with great magnificence, which is to be opened in a week or ten days." It was in consequence of these great expenses that the annual subscription was doubled, and the grant made to Brooks, as stated above (paragraph 7).

But notwithstanding this splendour a crisis occurred in 1804, which nearly caused another migration, for in that year, by a majority of 77 to 9 in a ballot, it was decided to authorise Griffin to provide another house for the reception of the Club. This resolution was taken in consequence of the action of one of the waiters, Geo. Hedder, who, in the hope that he might force the Managers to take him into partnership with Griffin, had recently purchased the lease of the Club-house and refused to give up his advantage "for any pecuniary consideration whatever, but solely on his being admitted into a share of the house." Griffin accordingly negotiated with the proprietor of the (then) late Duke of Leeds's house in St. James's Square, and subsequently for one in Bond Street, whereupon Hedder, who had meantime been dismissed, appears to have capitulated.

In 1815 Griffin & Co. produced a statement "of the great expenses that they had incurred in altering and improving the house, viz., in enlarging the morning-room, pulling down and rebuilding the staircase, and building the ante-room at the top of the same; and proving to the Managers that no profit whatever was derived from carrying on the Club, arising from the great rent, alterations, &c." The Managers accordingly recommended that an additional subscription of one guinea shall be paid by each member from January 1, 1816, and that another hundred members should be added, each new member paying an entrance fee of 20 guineas instead of 15 as heretofore. It was for a similar reason, viz., defraying the expense of the further enlargement of the morning-room that in 1823 twenty-five more members were added (see paragraph 4). Some further alterations were made in 1846 on Banderet's assuming the position of sole "Master," when a smoking-room and dressing-room were provided, the coffee-room was enlarged, and a room in the adjoining house in Park Place was adapted to form a small library, towards which the Managers contributed £1000. So the house remained until the last great reconstruction—in 1889–90 (see paragraph 12).

Tenure of the Club-house

12. Down to the year 1854 the Club-house had been held by Banderet, as Master, on a lease from Mr. Haldimand; but in that year the Club purchased the freehold from him for £25,000; of which £10,000 were paid out of the fund accumulated between 1829 and 1845, and the balance of £15,000 was borrowed, and was eventually paid off in January 1878.

Thenceforward Banderet became the tenant of the Club at an annual rent of £1300, out of which was paid the interest on the loan, and the surplus added to the Managers' fund.

A further acquisition was made in 1857 by the purchase of the adjacent premises—No. 2 Park Place—from the executors of Mr. Bidwell, at a total cost of £5673 19*s.* 3*d.* Small use, however, was made of this house, which, with the exception of the library above mentioned, remained in the occupation of Banderet and his family until his death, 1880.

Reconstruction of the Club-house 1889-90

13. The last great alterations were made in 1889–90 when No. 2 Park Place was incorporated in the Club-house. Up to that time the coffee-room was what is now the strangers' smoking-room on the first floor, the only smoking-room being the round room at the back of the house, now divided into dressing-rooms. There was practically no library, the only apology for one being a small room beyond the coffee-room containing little beyond Hansard and the back volumes of the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, and the current novels from a circulating library. Through this library was another small room into which hardly any one ever went, and through that again a very small dressing-room which hardly any one ever used. These incommodious little rooms, together with the rest of No. 2 Park Place, were swept away and the present coffee-rooms, with library above, erected in their place; and the old drawing-rooms and coffee-rooms given up to smokers and their guests. The hall and staircase also were entirely reconstructed. Another important reform, introduced after Banderet's death, was the institution of club bedrooms, and also the privilege of inviting guests to dinner, and more recently—May 1896—to luncheon.

A requisition to allow the introduction of one stranger, for the purpose of dining only, during the recess of Parliament had been refused by the Managers in 1850, on the ground that "the proposal would not tend to the comfort and general satisfaction of the Club." But few innovations have been more successful than the strangers' dinners, which now are a very substantial increase to the revenue of the Club, and—as probably most members will agree—are a great convenience to them, and a great pleasure to their guests.

Changes in the Coffee-room arrangements

14. It is not easy to trace the gradual changes which have taken place in the dining arrangements of Brooks's. Originally, as the old Rules above cited show, there was a house-dinner at a fixed price per head; but where the "Eating-room" referred to was situated cannot be ascertained.

Within the recollection of the older members the coffee-room was the small round room at the back of the house which in 1858 was converted into a smoking-room; and in July 1859 an application having been made by several members to "dine in the back morning-room," the Managers agreed to it. This arrangement did not endure for long, as so far back as 1862 the present strangers' smoking-room unquestionably was the coffee-room, and so continued until the reconstruction. The change of situation of the coffee-room to its present position was a surprise and cause of regret to many, and was carried on a proposal suddenly made at the close of a general meeting, held July 24, 1888, to consider the proposed reconstruction, when many members, thinking that the business of the meeting was concluded, had either left, or had betaken themselves to luncheon in the next room. Great therefore was their astonishment to find that it had been suddenly proposed and carried to remove the coffee-room to the ground floor.

*The Fox Club

15. Any historical notice of Brooks's would be incomplete without some mention of the Fox Club—a club within a club—which holds its meetings at Brooks's three or four times in the course of the Parliamentary Session, and whose object is to keep alive the memory of, probably, the most distinguished, and certainly the most popular, member who has ever belonged to Brooks's, Charles James Fox.

This is not the place for a lengthy memoir of Fox. The follies and vices of his youth have been fully recounted by such able pens as Sir George Trevelyan, Lord Rosebery and Mr. Lecky, not to speak of the original sources of their information such as Walpole, Wraxall and the Selwyn correspondence. Launched into society which, as Sir George Trevelyan writes, "was one vast Casino," at an age when he ought still to have been at Eton; at sixteen a member of Brooks's, at that time the headquarters of the fashionable gambling, "he found himself surrounded with every facility for ruining himself, and in the best of company."

Under such circumstances it is not wonderful that he availed himself of his opportunities, having on one occasion, as stated by Gibbon, sat playing at hazard for twenty-two hours in succession, and losing £11,000, and that at twenty-five he was a ruined man notwithstanding that his father had relieved him by paying £140,000 out of his own property.

* The information respecting the Fox Club is chiefly derived from notes left by the late Sir Augustus K. Stephenson, who for thirty-seven years acted as its secretary, whose father was a member of it in 1829 and had been a member of Brooks's since 1818, and had acted as Manager and Secretary of the Fox Club in succession to Lord Holland and Sir Ronald Ferguson.

The turn from reckless profligacy and extravagance dates from about 1778, when he definitely joined the Rockingham party, who received him with open arms. "He became first the comrade, then the close ally, and at length the adored and undisputed leader of men from whom, in whatever relation he might act with them, there was nothing but good to learn. The immediate change in his habits, it must be admitted, stopped many degrees below perfection. He still lived on credit, which he could not help if he was to live at all. . . . He still played high, and long and often," but associating with such men as Richmond, Burke, Gibbon and others with whom he was brought into contact at Johnson's "Club," wrought the change in him, and "as he grew in years the time which he employed bore ever a larger proportion to the time which he wasted. . . . He tended steadily throughout his life towards higher views and quieter ways until his sweet and lofty nature had lost all trace of what had been disastrous, and nearly fatal, to him in his early circumstances and training."

He cast a spell over men who in character and principles were as unlike him as possible. "He is a man," said Burke, "made to be loved, of the most artless, candid, open, and benevolent disposition; disinterested in the extreme; of a temper mild and placable to a fault, without one drop of gall in his whole constitution." "The power of a superior man," said Gibbon, "was blended in his attractive character with the softness and simplicity of a child. Perhaps no human being was ever more perfectly exempt from the taint of malevolence, vanity or falsehood."

"He possessed," said Erskine, "above all men I ever knew the most gentle and yet the most ardent spirit."

Of the love felt towards him by his friends there can be no stronger proof than that in 1793 they should have raised a sum of £70,000 to pay his debts and to buy him an annuity which, in a financial point of view, put him fairly at his ease.

Probably few now living could have known any who were personally intimate with Mr. Fox, but many may have known men whose relations of the previous generation were so.

A relative of the present writer, who had only once as a young boy seen Fox, but whose father and grandfather had been his close friends, had been so trained in the tradition of Fox, that, although the least emotional of men, he could hardly speak calmly about him, and any reflection upon him at once excited his strongest displeasure; thus fully corroborating the assertion of Lord Macaulay in a letter written June 7, 1831: "Even now, after the lapse of five-and-twenty years, there are those who cannot talk for a quarter of an hour about Charles Fox without tears." Such being the relations subsisting between Fox and his friends it is not surprising that after his death some steps should have been taken by his friends and admirers to keep alive the memory of so attractive a personality, and yet it is impossible accurately to trace the origin of the Fox Club, as the earliest existing record of it is the list of twenty-nine members present at a dinner on February 7, 1829—nearly twenty-three years after Fox's death.*

There had been, in Fox's life-time, a "Whig Club" to which he had belonged, and it was in consequence of the toast which he gave at a dinner of that club, May 20, 1798—"The sovereignty of the People"—that on the 25th George III. with his own hand erased his name from the list of the Privy Council; and on October 10 in the same year a banquet was held to mark the eighteenth anniversary of his first election for Westminster, at which Fox again proposed the obnoxious toast.

It is perhaps not an unfair inference that the Fox Club was an offshoot or continuation of the older "Whig Club"; among the members of which subscriptions were occasionally made "to pay Mr. Fox's debts." † This was the belief of Sir Augustus Stephenson.

* Sir W. Brampton Gurdon has kindly furnished me with a copy of a letter dated December 28, 1820, from Lord Albemarle to his grandfather, Mr. Theophilus T. Gurdon, requesting him to be a steward at a "Fox Dinner" about to be held, and at which his name was advertised as chairman. This would seem to show that dinners commemorative of Fox were held from time to time from his death, though probably the "Fox Club" was a somewhat later development of the worship of Fox, and, as stated, first took definite form in 1829. Lord Cockburn records ("Memorials of his Time") that large dinners in memory of Fox were held annually in Edinburgh from 1821 to 1825, on Fox's birthday, January 24. At two of these, in 1822 and 1824, the presidents were Gen. Sir Ronald Ferguson and Mr. Ferguson of Raith, both of whom were members of Brooks's, and it is possible that these gatherings may have suggested the idea of instituting the Fox Club in 1829, when Sir Ronald Ferguson was present. On the Edinburgh dinner of 1825 Lord Cockburn remarks: "This I think was the last of these festivals. They were never intended to be perpetual; but were only resorted to for political union, and excitement during the stage that we have now passed through. These Fox dinners did incalculable good. They animated and instructed and consolidated the Whig party with less trouble and more effect than anything which could have been devised."

† This is probably the foundation of the erroneous notion of the eleventh guinea of the annual subscription having been imposed for this object (see paragraph 9).

Down to 1843 the meetings of the Club were held at the Clarendon, but in that year, on an application signed by sixteen members of the Fox Club, a Rule was passed granting permission to that body to use the great room at Brooks's for their meetings. Of these the first always takes place on the Thursday following the meeting of Parliament, the second and third as may be fixed by the Club in the course of the session, and the fourth at Greenwich in July.

No speeches are allowed, and only the four following toasts are given without "note or comment":

1. "In the memory of Charles James Fox."
2. "Earl Grey and the Reform Bill."
3. "The Memory of Lord Holland."

This toast was added by unanimous resolution on April 24, 1841; and on June 5 following, on motion previously given by Sir Robert Adair and Mr. Clive, £200 were voted from the funds of the Club towards the monument proposed to be erected to his memory, now just inside the railings of Holland House, on the Hammersmith Road.*

4. "To the Memory of Lord John Russell."

Added on June 22, 1878, on the motion of Mr. Grenville Berkeley. As originally proposed the toast was to the memory of "Earl Russell," but at the next meeting it was unanimously carried that the style by which he had been best known should be adopted, a course which met with the cordial approval of Countess Russell, to whom the point had been referred.

* The pedestal bears the following inscription:

"Nephew of Fox, and friend of Grey
Be this my highest fame
That those who know me best will say
'He tarnished neither name.'"

APPENDICES

A. THE COUNTESS OF STRATHMORE.—Lady Strathmore married secondly Lieut. Andrew Robinson Stoney, who assumed the surname of Bowes, "than whom a more consummate villain never went through this world unhorsewhipped, and left it unhung." Her history as the wife of this ruffian forms one of the most extraordinary romances of modern times.

(See "Lives of A. R. Bowes and the Countess of Strathmore," by Jesse Foot, 1812, also Fordyce, "History of Durham.")

This marriage is believed to have suggested to Thackeray the character of "Barry Lyndon."

B. DEATH OF THE MARQUIS OF TAVISTOCK.—The following is the account of the accident from the "Annual Register," 1767:

"On Tuesday, the 10th instant (March), his lordship being a stag-hunting, leapt his horse over a low hedge towards the end of the chase, when the horse, being much fatigued and jaded with the length of the chase, fell with him; and his lordship, not being able to quit the reins, was trampled on, whereby several fractures were made in his head."

There are references to this accident in several of the Selwyn letters at the time, from Lord Carlisle, Lord Bolingbroke, and Mr. Crawford. Lord Tavistock died from the effects of his injuries twelve days after their occurrence, and his young wife followed him in the next year.

C. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SELWYN.—Descended from a distinguished family in Gloucestershire. Was born 1719, and in 1751 by the death of his elder brother became heir to the family estates in the neighbourhood of Gloucester, and a considerable landed property at Ludgershall, with the power of returning a member for that borough; while his family connections enabled him during a long course of years to secure his own return for the city of Gloucester.

He first entered Parliament for Ludgershall in 1747, and for forty-four years—until his death, 1791—he represented one or other of these constituencies; and many of the early members of Brooks's also represented Ludgershall, doubtless through his influence.

Under these circumstances he naturally held several lucrative sinecures.

"He was at one and the same time Surveyor of Crown Lands, which he never surveyed; Registrar in Chancery at Barbadoes, which he never visited; and Surveyor of the Meltings and Clerk of the Irons in the Mint, where he showed himself once a week in order to eat a dinner which he had ordered, but for which the nation paid." (See "Early History of Charles James Fox," p. 108.)

His character was in many respects a remarkable one; a brilliant wit, a thorough man of the world; with a kind heart, and a passionate fondness for children, he united a morbid love of horrors, especially a taste for attending and hearing about executions. The trial and execution of the rebel lords in 1746 excited his keen interest; and he paid a visit to Paris in order to be present at the hideous execution of the attempted regicide Damiens in 1756. (See Jesse's "George Selwyn" and Sir N. Wraxall's "Memoirs.") A namesake of Charles Fox having been hung at Tyburn, the latter inquired of Selwyn whether he had attended the execution? "No," was Selwyn's reply, "I make a point of never frequenting rehearsals." Reference to this curious propensity is made in a letter to him dated October 1, 1746, from the Honorable G. Townsend, and on January 11, 1765, from the Honorable Henry St. John. Even the sight of the corpse of a friend seems to have afforded him a strange pleasure. "When the first Lord Holland was on his death-bed, he was told that Selwyn, who had long lived on terms of the closest intimacy with him, had called to inquire after his health. 'The next time Mr. Selwyn calls,' he said, 'show him up. If I am alive I shall be delighted to see him, and if I am dead he will be glad to see me.'"

"And yet this was the same individual who delighted in the first words and in the sunny looks of childhood; whose friendship seems to have partaken of all the softness of female affection; and whose heart was never hardened against the wretched and oppressed. To have been intimately acquainted with Geo. Selwyn, and to have loved him, appear to have amounted to the same thing."

D. General Burgoyne.—General Burgoyne would scarcely deserve "any special mention in this list if respect were had only to his parliamentary talents; but his sufferings in the cause of opposition, which elevated him into the rank of a martyr like Keppel; Fox's attachment to him . . . supplied every deficiency. In his person he must, when young, have possessed a most distinguished figure; but years had enfeebled him, though he was cast in an athletic mould. His military services in the field had never been resplendent. He seemed more fitted for the drawing-room or the closet than for the camp, for pleasing in society than for commanding armies. No man possessed more polished manners. His manifestoes were more admired for their composition while he was at the head of the British forces in America, than his tactics or his manœuvres, and for their turgid character obtained for him the name of 'Chrononhotonthologos.'" * (See Wraxall's "Memoirs," Vol. II.)

His surrender with the whole British army to the American General Gates at Saratoga, October 17, 1777, is reckoned by Sir Edward Creasy among the Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World.

"To few would the Valhalla of England open her gates with greater alacrity and pride than to the Marquis Cornwallis. The career of Cornwallis began in disaster but not in ignominy. The ignominy of his defeat in the American War belongs to the rulers of England, not to the general who failed in achieving an impossible task. In the defeat of Cornwallis there was not the shadow of an impeachment on the courage of the soldier or the conduct of the general. Throughout his later life there was no position of ardent responsibility in which the eyes of men were not directed to him. As ambassador he would not command peace to a power which spurned peace. As Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, of Ireland in her most critical days, he alone stood above the base means used to achieve that necessary work, the Union. Amid the wide wreck of honour, he was still the soul of honour. Through the midst of it he stood aloof; his name was unsoiled, unattainted; he could despise alike those who bought and those who sold. The fame of Cornwallis alone survives without an aspersion, without a suspicion. He alone strove to mitigate the miseries of civil war. When mercy was on all sides an exploded virtue, he dared to be merciful. His life at that trying period has been boldly thrown open, and baffles the most jealous censure.† As Governor-General of India (twice he held that arduous office, once in the prime of life, the last time to expire at a good old age on his viceregal throne) he laboured with primitive wisdom to repress the dominant grasping rapacity and insolent contempt of our native subjects, and to fix the foundations of our empire in the grateful affection, the wealth, and prosperity of the realm of India. He strove to rule India not as a conquered country, but as a province of our empire; for the benefit of our subjects, as for the interests of their masters." (See also "Rulers of India—Cornwallis.")

F. SHERIDAN. "One of the first objects," says Sir N. Wraxall, "meditated by Fox's party, after Sheridan's entrance into the House of Commons, in September 1780, was to procure, at all events, his election as a member of Brooks's Club." But among its members were two who held him in peculiar dislike—Geo. Selwyn and the Earl of Bessborough —who agreed not to absent themselves during the time allotted by the regulations of the club for ballots, and as one black ball sufficed to exclude a candidate, they twice prevented his election (once in 1778, when proposed by Fox). He proceeds to relate the artifice by which Sheridan's friends overcame this impediment; how a special messenger was sent with a note to Lord Bessborough in the name of his daughter-in-law, Lady Duncannon, informing him that his house in Cavendish Square was on fire, and entreating his immediate return home; while about the same time Selwyn received a note requesting his presence at his house, in Cleveland Row, on account of the sudden and alarming illness of his adopted daughter, Marie Fagniani, afterwards Marchioness of Hertford.

* "The most Tragical Tragedy that was ever Tragedized by any Company of Tragedians." A farce which appeared in 1770 ridiculing the bombastic plays of the time.

There is, too, another version of the story, in which the Prince of Wales is represented as having designedly detained Selwyn and Lord Bessborough in conversation while the ballot was going forward; but, unfortunately for a good story, the records of Brooks's show conclusively that, so far as the Prince and Lord Bessborough are concerned, it is without foundation. Sheridan was returned for Stafford, September 12, 1780. Mr. Fitzpatrick proposed him at Brooks's on October 12 in same year, and he was elected on November 2; but Lord Bessborough did not become a member till 1782, nor was the Prince of Wales one till 1783.

It is generally believed that Sheridan died in the extremity of poverty; and shortly before his end an article appeared from a generous enemy in the Morning Post urging "that relief should be given before it was too late. Prefer ministering in the chamber of sickness to ministering at the splendid sorrows that adorn the hearse. Life and succour against Westminster Abbey and a funeral"; and it was the contrast between the supposed squalid poverty of his death and the magnificence of his funeral in the Abbey which suggested the remark to a French journal, "France is the place for a man of letters to live in, and England the place for him to die in." (See Moore's "Life of Sheridan," quoted by Dean Stanley in "Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey.")

It is true that in his last days Sheridan was much harassed by money difficulties, and that a bailiff was in his house when he died; and Croker records a conversation with King George IV. in which His Majesty drew the most painful picture of the absolute destitution and squalor in which Sheridan had died. But King George IV. is not reported as having been the most accurate of men in his reminiscences, and the alleged conversation took place ten years after the event described, whereas in a letter to Tom Sheridan—Sheridan's only son, and at the time Colonial Treasurer at the Cape—his half-brother, writing on

(See Fraser Rae's "Sheridan," Vol. II. p. 286.)

G. AMBUSH AND ATTACK ON PITT IN ST. JAMES'S STREET.—On the dismissal of the Coalition Government, December 1783, Pitt became Prime Minister, and in February of that year the Corporation of London passed a vote of thanks to him (Pitt) for his public conduct, as also the Freedom of the City to be presented in a gold box of the value of one hundred guineas. A Committee appointed to carry these Resolutions into effect went on Saturday, February 28, in procession to the house in Berkeley Square, where Pitt then resided with his brother, Lord Chatham. After the presentation of the vote of thanks and the gold box the whole party went on together to the Hall of the Grocers' Company in the Poultry, where the Prime Minister was engaged to dine. Great crowds had been assembled in Berkeley Square from an early hour in the morning, and an immense concourse of people joined the procession after it left Lord Chatham's house, marching through the City amidst the loudest acclamations and shouts of welcome . . . In returning at night there were the same throng, there were the same acclamations. Such tokens of the rising popular favour to Pitt must, of course, have been gall and wormwood to those who desired to be called exclusively the "Friends of the People." Thus at night, when the crowd of artisans was dragging up St. James's Street the coach in which sat Pitt himself, Lord Chatham and Lord Mahon, and when they had come opposite Brooks's Club, at that period the stronghold of his political opponents, the coach was suddenly attacked by men armed with bludgeons and broken chair-poles, among whom—so at least at the time it was asserted and believed (let us hope untruly)—were seen several members of the Club. Some of the rioters made their way to the carriage, forced open the door, and aimed blows at the Prime Minister, which were, with some difficulty, warded off by his brother's arm. At length Mr. Pitt and his companions, after a severe struggle, made their way into White's Club. Hearing of this attack, "I called there," writes Wilberforce, "and to bed about three." The servants were much bruised, and the carriage nearly demolished. (See also the lines on this incident—Lord Stanhope's "Life of Pitt," Vol. I. p. 193.) The Parliament was dissolved on March 25, and Pitt obtained an overwhelming majority at the Polls, a result due partly, perhaps, to indignation at the outrage of February 28, and partly to his disinterested conduct in appointing Colonel Barré to the Clerkship of the Pells, worth £3000 per annum, instead of keeping it himself. (See Lord Rosebery's "Pitt," p. 54.)

H. BALL TO COMMEMORATE THE RECOVERY OF GEORGE III., 1789.—The Spring of 1789 witnessed great festivities in celebration of the recovery of George III. Balls were given both by White's and Brooks's, and were the occasion of most unseemly feeling between the party of the Prince of Wales and that of the Court.

The Prince detested White's as the chosen club of Pitt,* who had opposed him during the King's illness, and as soon as the entertainment was announced forbade his friends to attend it and, it is said, together with the Duke of York, sent their tickets to be sold at a public library. (See "Hist. of White's," by Honourable Alg. Bourke, Vol. I. p. 159).

Three weeks later, on April 21, Brooks's followed with a grand ball at the Opera House, one of the tickets for which is framed in the Strangers' room on the ground-floor of the Club, and the Prince's conduct towards the ball at White's gave a party character to that of Brooks's, with the result that all the ladies of the Court party refused to attend.

I. THE DISAPPEARANCE OF MR. BATHURST.—Benjamin Bathurst was third son of Henry Bathurst, Bishop of Norwich, and was in the Diplomatic Service. Early in 1809 he was sent to Vienna by his kinsman, Earl Bathurst, who in October of that year held the seals of Secretary of State for the Foreign Department.

Napoleon, harassed by the insurrection in Spain, was in the Peninsula; whither England was about to send an army, and consequently desired the diversion of a war in the heart of Germany. Austria hesitated, and it was in order to induce her to go to war that Bathurst was despatched to the Court of Vienna. In this he was successful, and on April 8 the war began. Bathurst, who remained with that Court, undoubtedly was under the impression that Napoleon bore him especial enmity on account of his action in provoking the Austrian Government to declare war. In July came the battle of Wagram, and in October peace between France and Austria was concluded at Schönbrun, and Bathurst set out on his way home.

He evidently apprehended danger on his road, and after some hesitation as to which route he would take, he resolved to travel to London by way of Berlin and North Germany. He was accompanied by his private secretary and a valet, and, to evade observation, assumed the name of Koch, and his secretary acted as courier under the name of Fisher. On November 25, 1809, about midday, he arrived at Perleberg on the route from Berlin to Hamburg, halted at the post-house for refreshments, and ordered fresh horses for the journey to Lenzen, which was the next station. Hard by the post-house was the inn—the White Swan, to which Bathurst went and ordered an early dinner—the horses not to be put in until he had dined. Close to the inn was a gate of the town, through which the road to Hamburg lay, and outside of it was a poor suburb of cottages and artisans' houses. Having finished his meal Bathurst inquired who was in command of the soldiers quartered in the town, and having been directed to his address he called upon Captain Klitzing, the officer named, and requested that he might be given a guard in the inn, saying that he was a traveller on his way to Hamburg, and that he had strong and well-grounded suspicions that his person was endangered; and during his visit he showed great signs of agitation and fear. Captain Klitzing, though he laughed at such fears, nevertheless gave him a couple of soldiers to accompany him to the inn.

On his return to the White Swan, he countermanded the horses, saying he would not start till night, considering that it would be safer to travel along the dangerous portion of the route by night, when Napoleon's spies would be less likely to be on the alert, and remained in the inn writing and burning papers. At seven o'clock he dismissed his guard, and ordered the horses to be ready at nine. He stood outside the inn, watching his portmanteau being replaced in the carriage, stepped round to the heads of the horses, and was never seen again.

Some little time elapsed before it was realised that the case was serious, and that the secretary thought of reporting it to Captain Klitzing, who at once used every endeavour to ascertain his fate. The next morning the river was dragged, outhouses, woods, marshes, ditches were examined, but not a trace could be found, nor was any trace ever found except that nearly three weeks later—December 16—two poor women, gathering sticks in a wood, found a pair of trousers which were unquestionably Bathurst's. In the pocket was a paper with writing on it. Two bullet holes were in the trousers, but no traces of blood about them, which could hardly have been the case had the bullets struck a man wearing them. The paper was a half-finished letter to Mrs. Bathurst, scratched in pencil, stating that he was afraid he would never reach England, and that his ruin would be the work of Count d'Entraigues.*

* Count d'Entraigues, a political intriguer, in 1797 at Venice, the soul of all the plots of Louis XVIII. and the Coalition. Afterwards in the service of Russia, and Councillor of the Russian Legation at Dresden, where he betrayed the Emperor Alexander by handing to the English Cabinet the secret articles of the Treaty of Tilsit; escaped to England, where he thenceforth resided, continuing to maintain correspondence in the interests of Louis XVIII. Assassinated with his wife near London, July 22, 1812.—Grand Dictionnaire Universelle du 19me Siècle.

Large rewards were offered—£1000 by the English Government, another £1000 by the family, and an additional 100 Friedrichs d'or by Prince Frederick of Prussia, but no information to be depended upon was ever received.

Many were the theories to explain the disappearance, which will be found very fully set forth in Mr. Baring Gould's "Historic Oddities and Strange Events," Vol. I.; but none appear satisfactory, and the case remains, and probably will ever remain, an unsolved mystery.

Mr. Bathurst left three children—a son and two daughters. The son died in consequence of a fall from a horse at a race in Rome. One daughter was drowned in the Tiber near the Ponte Molle, owing to her horse running away, and the third married the Earl of Castlestuart in 1830, and after his death (secondly) Signor Pistocchi.

J. The Hon. Frederick Byng ("The Poodle").—Among the hundred additional members selected in 1816 by the Special Committee was the Hon. Frederick Byng, fifth son of John, fifth Viscount Torrington, who continued a member for fifty-five years, and was, within the memory of members still living, a well-known figure in London Society and at Brooks's in particular. As a very small boy he had acted as a page of honour to Prince George of Wales at his ill-starred marriage with the Princess Caroline in 1795, and used to relate the curious incident of his being taken to Carlton House to be looked at by the Prince before appointment. He was in Paris in December 1815, and was present at the execution of Marshal Ney in the Luxembourg Gardens.

He was familiarly known as "The Poodle," from his curly hair, and though in the Foreign Office and much in Society he was one of the first in his station in life who turned his attention to parochial matters, and was a vestryman of St. James's.

In Brooks's he was a great disciplinarian, not to say rather a bully towards the younger members; and the present writer was once severely reprimanded by him for lighting a cigar outside the door, but beneath the balcony which then existed on the first floor. His consternation was extreme on one occasion when, in the drawing-room, he found a gentleman seated before the fire who had pulled off his boots, rung the bell, and asked the waiter for slippers! It turned out that the perpetrator of this outrage was a new member, an M.P. for some manufacturing constituency, who had, in those happy days of the undivided Liberal party, been elected without any one knowing or caring much about him; and who, presumably, was more at home in a commercial room than in Brooks's.

He appears also—according to Creevey—with some others "to have tried a rather dangerous experiment with the (new) House of Commons, by which they lighted it so brilliantly that you could read the smallest print, and if you held a candle to the paper it added no light to the dazzling glare, which came from 5000 apertures in gas pipes between the roofs when the thermometer was at 120 degrees and kept rising! They had fire engines in attendance, and a hose laid along every gas pipe for fear of accidents; but they did not venture to try it again."

K. ABORTIVE DUEL BETWEEN BROUGHAM AND "DANDY RAIKES."—An amusing account of this dispute, every actor in which was a member of Brooks's, is given in the "Creevey Papers," Vol II. p. 106. Raikes, though a member of the Club, had never been known to enter it. On March 4, 1827, having watched Brougham go in, he followed him, and while he was eating his luncheon grossly insulted him. A challenge was the inevitable result, and Brougham applied in the first instance to General Ferguson, who had heard, part at least of, the insulting expressions, to carry a challenge for him to Raikes; which, however, the General peremptorily declined to do, upon the grounds of having been mixed up in so many such things. Brougham eventually got General Sir Robert Wilson to deliver the challenge; but in the meantime he had been taken into custody, carried to Bow Street, and bound over to keep the peace. "This had been the work of Jack the Painter, alias Spring Rice, who was present at the row at Brooks's, and had immediately taken himself off to Bow Street to inform; his only object, I have no doubt, being not to lose Brougham's vote to-night upon that most vital of all subjects—the Catholic question."

L. THE REFORM BILL OF 1832.*—Brooks's as the great Whig Club was the scene of exciting events during the agitation which accompanied the passing of the Reform Bill. This great measure, brought in immediately on the assembling of the new Parliament in 1831 after passing the Commons, was rejected by the Lords by a majority of 41.

It was again passed by the Commons on March 23 in the following year by a majority of 116, and after passing the second reading in the Lords by a majority of 9, was eventually on the third reading rejected by 35 on May 7, and, on the King's refusal to create Peers sufficient to pass it, on the 9th Lord Grey's Ministry resigned.

On the same day a meeting of the leading Whigs took place at Brooks's, at which it was arranged that Lord Ebrington should immediately give notice in the Commons, for the following day, of an address to the Crown on the present state of public affairs, which, notwithstanding that Lord Althorpe deprecated it as premature, he brought forward on the 10th, and carried by a majority of 80.

* The information in this paragraph is derived mainly from Sir D. Le Marchant's "Memoir of Viscount Althorpe," "The Annual Register," and the Edinburgh Review of 1832.

On Saturday (12th) it was understood that the Premiership had been accepted by the Duke of Wellington, and that the King required as a condition that the proposed Cabinet should carry through a full measure of Reform, in satisfaction of what the King considered his plighted faith to the people, and Lord Ellenborough had already expressed his desire that such a Bill should include a lower franchise than had been proposed by Lord Grey.

Public indignation rose to its highest pitch, and men, the least eager on party politics, resented such an outrage on public morality.

The Sunday—May 13—was no day of rest among politicians. A great meeting of the Whig party was held at Brooks's that night, at which Lord Ebrington, Mr. Hume and other leaders, now strongly urged the rejection of any Reform Bill which the new Ministers might prepare. Mr. Stanley (afterwards Earl of Derby and Tory Premier) on this occasion particularly distinguished himself. He jumped upon the table, and in an impassioned and stirring speech of unusual violence attacked the new Minister and the Tory aristocracy most unsparingly, not sparing even Queen Adelaide, who—it was believed—had warmly espoused their cause.

The new Administration, however, was impossible, and, after a week of the most furious agitation, on Friday 17th, Lord Grey was again summoned by the King, and announced that a promised secession of Tory Peers would secure the passing of the Bill, which received the Royal assent on June 7.

Nothing occurred for the next fifty-three years to disturb the serenity of Brooks's, which, under the mastership of H. Banderet, settled into that state of refined luxury already referred to. (See Introduction, Para. 5).

M. Lord Granville's Appeal at Brooks's in 1887.*—In 1886 Mr. Gladstone introduced his Bill for Home Rule in Ireland; and only those who remember that time can realise the extreme bitterness which not only made itself felt in political life, but also invaded English society. It broke up parties, it invaded Clubs, it embittered social relations; . . . even the sacred precincts of Brooks's were stirred by the demon of discord. A member of Mr. Gladstone's late Cabinet, who, it was declared, had many years before been himself "pilled" when a candidate, was declared to have spoken contemptuously of the Liberal Unionists as he descended the stairs of the Club, where he had been dining as a guest. The irate Liberal Unionists immediately discovered an easy way of revenge. The son of the ex-Minister came up, it so happened, for election almost immediately after this ill-timed outburst of postprandial eloquence, and was swiftly made to experience the same fate which had befallen his parent many years before. Thereupon the supporters of Mr. Gladstone at the next opportunity revenged themselves by treating the eldest son of a Whig Unionist peer in a similar manner. Then gradually at each successive election the circle of carnage widened and widened until it began to be whispered that it would soon be impossible for anybody to get into Brooks's at all, and that the time might be more or less accurately calculated when the last member of the Club would in solitary glory be seen contemplating the declining sun of London Society from the large window which looks down St. James's Street. One member declared that the shade of Mr. Fox had been observed flitting in the passages; and though another member surmised that it was only the solid figure of an ancient servitor of the Club with a bottle of port in his hand, which had been mistaken for the shade of the statesman, both agreed in acknowledging that the gravity of the situation was worthy of the appearance of one of the Whig saints.

Who, it was asked, could save the situation? One man only, Lord Granville, was the response. Would he do it, and if so how could it be done? Another election was coming round, fraught with a certain renewal of hostilities, and after that the deluge. The fatal day soon arrived. The room was crowded. Lord Granville was observed moving uneasily about. "Do you think they will stand it?" he asked of a friend. "They may stand it from you, but from nobody else," was the reply. Then just as the clock struck three, and the ballot, according to what was then the practice, was about to commence, Lord Granville stepped forward, and addressing the members, made a preliminary apology for turning the gathering into something like a discussion forum. In a few well-chosen words he then alluded to the antiquity of the Club, and the previous divisions in the party which it had survived, and expressed a hope—using almost the words which Burke had employed in a slightly different connection—which he believed all present in their hearts really shared, that there should at least be one place left in London where a truce might be allowed to the divisions and animosities of mankind, and friends might still be allowed to meet one another on the same terms as of old.* A murmur of suppressed applause ran round the room. All felt that a true note had been struck, and that the better feelings of human nature had been vindicated. The immediate result of the ballot proved the victory which had been gained. All the candidates, to whichever section of the party they belonged, were elected, and the members broke up exercising an easy virtue by denouncing the ex-Minister as the cause of all the trouble. "I never felt so nervous in my life," Lord Granville said as he walked home.

N. Quarrel between Lord Alvanley and O'Connell.

The following correspondence has only been brought under my notice since the "Memorials" have been in the press.—V. A. W.

On April 20, 1835, in the House of Commons, O'Connell made a violent attack upon Lord Alvanley, and referred to him as a "bloated buffoon"; which he seems to have repeated at a public meeting in the country on the following day.

Both parties were at the time members of Brooks's, and on May 2 the following correspondence was sent to the "Members of Brooks's" by Lord Alvanley:

To the Members of Brooks's.

London, May 2nd, 1835.

Gentlemen,—In the House of Commons, on the 20th of last month, Mr. O'Connell made use of expressions of a coarse and insulting nature with regard to me. I received the account of his having done so in the country on the 21st, and immediately enclosed the following letter for him to Col. Damer, who, finding that he had left town, forwarded it to Dublin by the post of the 22nd:

"Sir,—In the remarks you made on Monday last, on a question which I had put on the previous Saturday to Lord Melbourne, a question of purely a political nature, you used language which I cannot allow to pass unnoticed. I am aware that you assume a right of insulting with impunity; and I can hardly hope that you will make an exception in my favour, by doing that which every other gentleman would do, and giving satisfaction where you have offered insult; I, however, give you the option of doing so, and my friend Col. Damer will make the necessary arrangements, should you be inclined to avail yourself of my proposal.

"I am, your obedient servant,

"Alvanley.

"Clifden, Tuesday."

Having ascertained his arrival in Dublin on the 26th, and received no answer, on the 28th Col. Damer wrote to him again on that day:

"Sir,—I was in hopes to have heard from you by this time, and must request that you will return me an immediate answer to Lord Alvanley's letter of the 22nd, as he is impatient at labouring under the stigma of your gratuitous insult to him on the 20th.

"I am, your obedient servant,

"George Damer.

"40 Grosvenor Street, April 28."

To this second letter he has returned no answer. Having, therefore, tried those means to obtain redress which are customary amongst gentlemen, I now appeal to the only tribunal of men of honour, to which we are both amenable; and have, therefore, sent a requisition, already signed by several members of the Club, requesting the managers to call a general meeting, to take the case into consideration.

It has been objected to me that this is a question of a private nature, and that the Club is not called upon to interfere. I acknowledge that it is of a private and personal nature; but I think, that as the honour of two of its members is deeply implicated, the Club has a right to do so, should it think fit. The one has received a gratuitous insult, for which the other refuses in any way to atone, thereby claiming for himself an exemption from those laws, by which the society of gentlemen is regulated, and without which the honour and feelings of every man would be at the mercy of those who might choose to cover themselves with the shield of irresponsibility. Having that right, I think it will be but justice in this instance to exercise it, and to give to the one an opportunity of stating why he, a member of the Club, has remained under the stigma of an affront, for which he has received neither satisfaction nor apology; and to impress upon the other that it utterly repudiates the assumption of being out of the pale of those laws of honour, by which gentlemen are governed.

I have the honour to be,

Your obedient servant,

ALVANLEY.

O'Connell's repugnance to duelling, owing to his having in early life killed an adversary, is well known, but a meeting was ultimately arranged between Lord Alvanley and Morgan O'Connell, son of Daniel O'Connell, also a member of Brooks's, and three shots were fired on Wimbledon Common without harm to either party. Reference to this duel is made by Creevey (Vol. II. p. 304) who pronounced Alvanley "quite wrong."

A much fuller account will be found in the Greville Memoirs (of Geo. IV. and Wm. IV., Vol. III. pp. 256–7) in which the opinion of the writer seems decidedly adverse to O'Connell.

No notice of this affair is to be found in the records of the Club, no minutes having been kept before 1840.

* This appeal was in fact made two years later than the occurrences stated by Lord Fitzmaurice, viz., on 19th March, 1889. Lord Fitzmaurice is quite correct in his account of the circumstances which occurred in 1887, when, on the 9th February, the Managers suspended the ballot until after the Easter recess. Two years later a candidate was coming up for election who was a prominent Unionist, and who was further proposed by a member of Brooks's at that time holding office in Lord Salisbury's Cabinet, which excited a considerable feeling among Gladstonian members of the club. Fears were entertained that the candidate would be rejected and that the bitter feelings of 1887 would be revived. Hence the occasion of Lord Granville's intervention.
